Neely Tucker

Neely Tucker is a graduate of the University of Mississippi where he received his bachelor's degree in journalism and a minor in English.

Currently, Neely writes for the Washington Post where he has been the staff writer for sixteen years and was instrumental in covering the 2016 U.S. presidential campaign. He is also a published novelist through Viking Publishers. He has four published books including, “Only the Haunted Run”, “Murder D.C.”, “The Ways of the Dead”, and “Love in the Driest Season”.

Prior to his current position at the Washington Post, he was a foreign correspondent for seven years in sixty-plus countries and territories where he gained experience in cross-cultural communication.

Neely gives a profound thought on the value of communication to students. “Read, write and think. Everything in your life is communicating something to you, and you are communicating in everything you do. The study of communication, is, then, the study of life.”

“You are communicating in everything you do.”
